Red Cross Society Organ

In view of the proposal to form a branch of the Red Cross Society and to send a corps of nurses, medical attendants and lay helpers to the front from the origin of the organization is of interest.

The forerunners of the society were St. Vincent de Paul and his gifted coadjutor, Mlle. de Guad, who in 1818 organized a society in France to look after the wounded on the field of battle. Baron Larrey, surgeon major of hospitals with the army on the Rhine in 1792 and who later served as surgeon-in-chief, did much valuable work along the same lines.

At the time of the Crimean war the Red Cross society was regularly instituted in England following the appeal of Tennyson for nurses and medical comforts for the troops. A few years later when Queen Victoria created the order of the Royal Red Cross, Florence Nightingale's name was the first placed on the list of nurses.

In 1869 the British Red Cross Society was founded by John Furley, its chief avowed object being the bandaging together of doctors, nurses and efficient lay helpers.

A noted writer describing the great work of the organization said: "The most novel feature fringing the battlefield of today and differentiating it from the past is the Red Cross tent, beneath the protecting bower of which the trained nurse carries on her beneficent work."

Western Canada Should Grasp Opportunities

That Western Canada should take the opportunity now of interesting Belgian, French and English capitalists was the remark made this morning by a well known local citizen who has just returned from the Old Land, where, through business and other channels he was brought in contact with many of those minded men.

He believed that immigration from all the warring nations would be great immediately following the termination of the war and thought that as a result of the conflict, families who formerly had sons now making a successful living in Canada would also make Canada their future home.

But in regard to the financiers, the Edmontonian said: "Western Canada should not let another day pass without making his representation to these men, telling them of the opportunities provided by the west, and emphasizing the facts in regard to the richness of its natural resources.

"Although Alberta has offices in London it is my opinion, formed from careful observation, that work of the right character is not being carried on. At the present time very few people really know where the Alberta offices are situated, while the literature that is being distributed does little to convince people what Alberta is really capable of."

"What I would like to see and what I think is really necessary, and especially at this time, would be the inauguration of a strenuous campaign among the people of the United Kingdom, and among the many worried refugees now in London. I am sure it would have good effect and would well repay itself. Many could be convinced that Canada offered a sound field for the investment of their capital, both in agricultural lands, in manufacturing plants and other places of industry. It is up to the administration of Alberta to grasp these opportunities."

—Edmonton Citizen.

Some Basic Principles of Agricultural Chemistry

A pamphlet has been issued by the Central Experimental Farm entitled "The Farmer as a Manufacturer." It has been prepared by Mr. A. T. Stuart, B.A., Assistant Chemist, who has presented a number of simple explanations of the chemical processes that take place in vegetable and animal life.

The processes are indicated by which the farmer, whose raw materials are soil, water and sun, is able to manufacture therefrom an apparently endless variety of products both plant and animal. It is shown, however, that their composition is to be understood, consisting as they do of but four principal constituents. The nature of the raw materials, the process of manufacture and the products are discussed.

Under the heading "Maintaining Fertility" it is pointed out that "the farmer must exercise extreme care if he would keep his soil in the highest condition of productivity. Soil is the most precious of the farmer's capital, and the security is absolute. Try as he may he cannot 'break the bank.' He may bring about temporary derangement and divide it up for a while as he suspects, but invariably under better management prosperity can be restored and perhaps even larger profits than ever secured."

The pamphlet, which is Bulletin No. 20, of the Second Series, is available to those to whom the information is of interest on application to the Publication Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

One practical outcome which it is believed at Ottawa will develop out of the war is the rounding out of Canadian confederation.
